ART LOAN EXHIBITION.

A Correspondent Tells of What There is to be Seen

COLORADO SPRINGS, November 28, '82

To the Editor of the GAZETTE

Colorado Springs they tell me is a city only about ten years old, springing up like a mush room in one of the beautiful basins of the Rockies, and I accepted the assertion in good faith But while "taking it in" I chanced to pass a certain corner, and seeing in the large windows a placard, "Loan Exhibition" and and on the door, "Open," I entered, paying the small fee of admittance to the gentlemanly door keeper sitting on the left To say I was surprised is putting the matter very tamely, even to describe my first impressions – so much light, so much beauty so much color and such artistic arrangement I never saw excelled within the same limits any where in all my travels

The art department being central and with its handsome back ground of dark maroon throwing out in strong relief its varied and elegant burden of pictured beauty, I stood to observe it more in detail In a very carefully adjusted position the lazy beauty of that grand Sandwich island volcano calls you to stand on the very verge of its crater and look in upon its fearful brightness, and it grows upon you as you gaze until the flame almost seems to flicker before you, and you involuntarily wait the bursting of a new column of fire or sulphur vapor from its palpitating surface It is simply grand Around it are grouped scenes and pictures that an artist's soul would revel in and we poor mortals must admire We next noticed two large collections from South America—embroideries from India, vases from Persia, also silks, satins, crapes, laces, scarfs, shawls and fabrics of all kinds, books black with age and dating back hundreds of years an old Bible with Luther's notes on a small table lying open for inspection, an elegant modern clock and one over 200 years old, coins dating back 2 000 years; ancient papers, swords, knives, jewelry, Indian relics precious stones beautiful plaques, statuary, panel portraits, something new at every step you take, making in all a grand display and a great credit to the city Two very pretty booths, one for fruits the other candy, ornament the room Time will not permit even a mention of all the collections there, as there are show cases and cabinets on every side full of heirlooms old china, ancient crockery, etc The best way to form any idea of it is to go and see not only once, but buy a season ticket for $1 00, and at your leisure study the collection there It is like a highly illustrated library, and deserves attention and study L M

WATER WANTED.

How the Artesian Wells are Being Bored.

Denver News

The work of sinking the government artesian well at Akron has commenced, the first stroke of the drill having been given Friday last. Horace Beach, of Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, who has charge of the work for the government, was present and witnessed the opening of the work. One of the gentlemen associated with Mr Flemming in carrying out the contract was in the city yesterday, having returned from Akron since the beginning of the work A News reporter, in conversation with this gentleman, was surprised to hear that the tackle for the work of sinking the well and which had been brought from Pennsylvania, weighed 37,000 pounds

"Of what does this consist?" asked the reporter

"Well, in the first place we have a derrick seventy three feet high to swing the tools over the hole The tools are attached to a hawser laid five one and seven eighths inch in diameter by an instrument we call a rope socket, a very simple affair being merely a tube at one end to receive the rope, which is rivoted fast The other end is in the form of a box, with a thread turned in it to receive the sinker bar"

"What is that?"

"A heavy three and three fourths inch round iron bar, fourteen feet long, with pin on one end and box on the other The pin screws into the rope socket box, and the box receives the pin on the jars They are made in the shape of links so that should the tools get stuck they can be jarred loose The jars have a box on the other end to receive the auger stem, which is also a three and three quarter inch bar of round iron"

"How long is this"

"Fifty-six feet long, with box and pin The box receives the bit which does the drilling This bit is made of the very best of American steel and weighs about 175 pounds They are all attached to the walking beam"

"Now what is that?"

"A heavy timber 12x26 inches, 26 feet long set on a post 18x18 inches, 11 feet high"

"How is the attachment made?"

"By a temper screw five feet long This is to let out rope as the tool penetrates the rock below"

"How is power furnished?"

"This is all driven by an eighteen horse power engine made expressly for drilling deep wells, by Ball & Co., of Erie, Pa., and is worked by the men in the derrick at a distance of eighty feet from where it stands We only work two men on a shift"

"Don't the tools sometimes get stuck?"

"Sometimes, but if any get fast in a crevice or a mud vein, so that they cannot be jarred loose, we run down a rope knife and cut the rope This is made of two pieces of steel with the ends turned out so as to leave an opening for the rope to pass through, and held together with a set screw Immediately above this opening is a knife hung on a hinge and while it is going down into the well the edge stands up but as soon as an attempt is made to withdraw it, it takes hold of the rope and one or two jars of the walking-beam are enough to do the work of cutting

"Yes," said the reporter, "but then the way is blocked"

"That's nothing We attach another set of tools such as are stuck, but instead of a bit for drilling we put on a slip socket"

"That's another mystery.

"It is made in the shape of a tube, with a pair of slips inside This is let down and passes over the rope socket The slips are made to catch as the tools are withdrawn"

"Can you always do this?"

"We are almost sure to catch the first attempt, if the fastened tool does not hang against the wall Then we have to spud around it

"Don't barnacles call potatoes 'spuds'?"

"That's another kind It is spud is a concave piece of steel any length from five to sixty feet, and is made so as to go down close to the wall It is used in the same manner as though we were drilling This is called fishing, and is the most trying of all work connected with drilling wells I have known men to fish six months at a time, but this was before they made the present improved fishing tools They seldom last more than three or four days"

"I should think breakage of tools would trouble you"

"We have everything in duplicate so that we will not be delayed in case of accident We would not dare risk any tool that we could get made here

"Where were they made?"

"Our entire outfit was made by the very best men in the oil field of Pennsylvania. We have an experienced blacksmith in our crew so if anything should break it can be repaired on the ground."

"How is the accumulated deposit removed"

"The sediment or cut rock is withdrawn by the sand pipe, a tube about thirty feet long with a valve in the lower end. This is worked by a rope seven eighths of an inch in diameter Come out and see how it is all done"

"I shall be glad to do so"

Thanksgiving Proclamation

STATE OF COLORADO,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

WHEREAS, a kind and merciful Deity has spared our ancestors for many generations, from the scourge of pestilence, famine and war, and has bestowed on us the blessings which have been enjoyed during the year:

We have as a state enjoyed great prosperity. We have been spared all great afflictions and our health has been good, and we have every reason to be grateful to Almighty God for the many evidences of divine favor.

In recognition of this goodness to us as a people, I, Frederick W. Pitkin, governor of Colorado, do hereby designate and appoint Thursday, November 30, 1882, as a day of thanksgiving and recommend its general observance by the suspension of all business by religious services in the churches of all denominations and by the customary family reunions and holiday festivities.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the state to be affixed at the state capitol, in the city of Denver, this 14th day of November, A. D. 1882.

FREDERICK W. PITKIN,
[SEAL] Governor.

By the Governor:
N. H. MELDRUM, Secretary of State.

El Paso county is the only county that has indicted its ballot stuffers. It has given a good example to other counties.

The Republic still attends to 1879 election frauds, though there are no facts to show that there were any. This is all right, but it should not neglect the 1882 frauds which are proven in the eyes of all sensible men and the guilty parties are indicted by the judge and jury.

We sincerely hope that Senator Hill neither spent money to secure his seat or to defeat Mr. Campbell. But in the one case Mr. Chaffee, and in the other the Central Register Call aver that the senator was guilty of this sort of misdirection. When the future historian gives up the secrets, the world will know whether or not the senator's integrity is justly assailed. Meantime judgment should be reserved.—Republic.

In this affair the authority the public may well reserve its judgment. Chaffee is not responsible in any way and wishes to injure Senator Hill because Senator Hill successfully opposed Chaffee's entrance into the cabinet on the ground of his bad record. The Register Call has no character because it has changed its course too frequently and inconsistently within the last three months. Such charges to be listened to should be uttered by responsible parties.

The iron and feed men are pursuing a bulldozing course to and congress to prevent any reduction in the tariff. It is proving a miserable failure. A few days ago they began sending out dispatches stating such a mill or foundry had closed and many men thrown out of employment. At first some alarm was created, but reflection showed it was only done for effect. The mills running shared their profits with the mills shut down. There is undoubtedly some dullness in the iron trade, but no more than in other trades. It is caused largely also by overproduction. Our protective tariff has fostered these industries too generously. Steel rails are protected by a duty of $28 a ton. During 1878 the price prevailing in this country per ton was $70 to $80. The great increase in railroad building in 1879 and 1880 increased the demand so that the price rose to $80 a ton. Then the profits became enormous and new mills were started and old mills enlarged. Now it is found very naturally since the phenomenal demand for steel rails has ceased, that there is an over production. The result was to have been anticipated and it was just come when the natural laws of trade are interfered with by artificial laws giving an industry a hot house growth by preventing healthful competition.

President Garrett, of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, has just made before the Baltimore chamber of commerce the very serious charge against the Western Union Telegraph Co. that the agent of this company inspect cablegrams that affect the interests of their company. The following is his charge:

A remarkable combination occurred recently of all the cable interests between Europe and the United States, by which charges were greatly increased, and under which cables, although sent by the English and French lines, were subjected to the supervision of the Western Union company. In order to test whether any variation could be effected from this extraordinary plan an application was made on behalf of the Baltimore and Ohio company to the manager of the Direct United States Cable company, of which the distinguished Mr. John Pender, of London, is president, whether the Baltimore & Ohio company could forward cablegrams to France by that company without going through the hands of the Western Union company, is unless this assurance could be obtained the Baltimore & Ohio company would refer to use the cable. The response to this inquiry was that this could only be done with the understanding, that, should these cablegrams contain anything adverse to the Western Union company in any way, it would be the privilege of that company to inspect them, and that all cablegrams received from the other side are sent direct to the Western Union main office and from there distributed.

The man who makes this charge occupies a high position that it cannot be passed by in silence. Besides this scrutiny must extend beyond our mere Western Union interests. It is well known fact that Jay Gould has for some time attempted to control the associated press and has partly succeeded. He has also become an active manager in the Western Union and thus has to some extent consolidated the two interests. He is using these two powerful influences to help him as much as possible in his stock operations. As the cable companies are now consolidated with the Western Union, his facilities for affecting the markets and inspecting telegrams are increased. It is not only dishonorable, but destructive of all confidential communications. It is just as bad as though President Arthur should instruct the postmasters to inspect the correspondence of his political opponents.

Our dispatches indicate that the officeholders who were dismissed for complicity in Star route frauds will not tamely submit. The testimony against them is strong, however, and there can be no question about the result if the government remains firm. One of those removed was Mr. Helm of the printing department. The testimony which caused his dismissal was that of Mr. Buell, editor of the Washington Critic. It will be remembered that these papers contained continuous attacks on all those connected with the prosecution. Mr. Buell in his cross examination stated the following in regard to the ownership of these papers:

Mr. Practically yes, sir.

Q. Practically, actually, are you not? You have control of all matters that go into those papers?

A. No sir.

Q. Are you not the master of the machine?

A. No sir.

Q. Who is?

A. Well, I am not.

Q. Who is?

A. I think that perhaps, so far as I am concerned, Mr. Helm is. He is the general manager of both concerns, the financial manager and business manager. I defer to him so much that I would not say I had general control of the concern.

Q. Is not the editorial manager in control of a different department altogether from the financial and business manager of a paper?

A. I do not pretend and do not attempt to control the utterances and publications of either paper.

Q. Who does control them?

A. If anybody, I should say Mr. Helm did.

Q. Mr. Helm, who is the business manager?

A. He is the general manager.

Q. Is he the general manager of your editorials?

A. I suppose that he generally is. If one of my editorials did not suit him he would suspend the publication of it.

This shows conclusively by one of Judy's witnesses that Mr. Helm was doing all he could to break down the prosecution, though at the same time an employe of the government. His dismissal was just and deserved. The only surprise is that he was not dismissed before.

PERSONAL

A Cleveland dispatch says: "Mr. Hewitt is constitutionally better adapted to endure pain than most men. He never says his mind, dodge the restraint, and he carries us. I should say he is a little larger in stature than the latest photo of him. Children call the hair less portion of his head a dream room, and the hair is gone all the time.

Senator Dorsey has an elegant home at Las Vegas, New Mexico. The house externally resembles a typical southern plantation mansion, being two stories high with ample verandas. Lead is the chimneys built into the walls. Within are all the appliances and luxuries that adorned Mr. Dorsey's Washington home during his senatorial career.

In the proclamation for a day of thanksgiving Governor Jarvis of North Carolina says: "The people have been more abundant than ever before harvested in the state. Peace has everywhere prevailed within our borders. The health of the people has been extraordinarily good, while their progress in educational and material interests and in the cultivation of a high moral and religious sentiment has been equally satisfactory."

Seymour Barden, the English pitcher recently arrived in this country, says that just before he left England he asked Sir George Dasent if he had ever been in America, and on his saying he had, asked him to tell him all about it. He said he could tell him nothing about it, he had no impression about it. What did he think of New York? He didn't think of it. Had he been to Niagara? Yes. What did he think of it? He didn't think of it at all. When was he in America? Sixty four years and three months ago, and he was now sixty five. He was nine months old when he saw New York and Niagara and thought nothing of them.

Artemus and His Babes

San Francisco Call.

Artemus Ward started in California with an announcement that he would lecture on "The Babes in the Wood." He said he preferred this title to that of "My Seven Grandmothers." Nobody knows why, for there was, of course, to be as little in the lecture about babes in or out of the wood, as about seven or any other number of grandmothers. "The Babes in the Wood" was never written down. A few sentences only have survived of a performance which was destined to revolutionize the comic lecturing of the age. The "Babes" seem only to have been alluded to twice—that is, the beginning when the lecturer gravely announced "The Babes" as his subject, and then, after a rambling string of irrelevant witticisms, which lasted from an hour to an hour and a half, he concluded with "I now come to my subject, 'The Babes in the Wood.'" Then, taking out his watch, his countenance would suddenly change—surprise followed by great perplexity. At last, reconciling his former composure, and facing the difficulty as best he could, he continued: "But I find I have exceeded my time, and will therefore merely remark that, so far as I know, they were very good babes, they were as good as ordinary babes." Then, almost breaking down and much more nervously, "I really have not time to go into their history, you will find it all in the story books." Then, getting quite dreamy, "They died in the woods, listening to the woodpecker tapping the hollow beech tree." With some suppressed emotion, "It was a sad fate to them, and I pity them, so do you. Good night!" The success of this lecture throughout California was instantaneous and decisive. The reporters claimed that they could not write for laughing, and split their pencils desperately in attempts to take down the jokes.

Oscar Wilde's Decay.

New York Times.

Poor Oscar Wilde has at last become utterly an unemployed. It was the thing he most abhorred when he first arrived, and no man strove so hard to be always original and interesting, as this funk and long haired English esthete. The novelty has worn off, however, and the apostle of the beautiful pronounced the most wearisome bore in New York. The is saying a great deal. It surprised me that he retained his popularity so long, for a more repulsive man has seldom visited us. He is guilty of all sorts of petty meannesses, such as perpetually begging cigarettes from acquaintances and never offering any himself, eating dinners with indefatigable industry at other people's expense, and shirking out of paying cab fares, and "working" his friends shamelessly for whatever he can get out of them. He lives in cheap apartments in living place, and affects a sneer of contempt for all things American. Still he does not go away, but remains and lives on us. Public feeling for him has changed somewhat. When he landed here last New Year's day there was a general feeling that he was a young man with an idea, and that he ought to have fair play. He has had fair play and has proved himself an egotistical charlatan, a bumptious braggart and a vacuous bore. Now the feeling has changed. The esthete never goes out alone. The hoots and jeers of the crowd are too much for him, and he takes, whatever exercise is needful, late at night, in the side streets, and only ventures forth in the light when he can juggle some good citizen into accompanying him. The supreme ugliness of the man never struck me so forcibly as at the last Lotos club dinner a few nights ago. Unfortunately I sat nearly opposite him. It destroyed my appetite. His great mass of coarse hair fell on the collar of his coat, which looked glazed and greasy from the contact, and his little bleary eyes stared stupidly out from beneath half closed eyelids. His mouth, with its misformed, irregular, and black looking teeth, was positively the most repulsively ugly one I have ever seen, and his thick, dark colored lips and mottled skin hung in loose, oily folds. Such a face made up a caricature that resembled a being from another planet rather than an Englishman of the nineteenth century. It would seem to be about time for Oscar to return home.

Some Controversies

Chambers Journal.

In matters of controversy the woman usually has the best of it. A witty old author advises men to avoid arguments with ladies because in spinning yarns among silks and satins a man is sure to be worsted and twisted, and when a man is worsted and twisted he may consider himself wound up. The above retort might be matched by a dozen others culled from domestic controversy, in which the woman has come off triumphant. "Real is, my dear," said a friend of ours to his better half, "you have sadly disappointed me. I once considered you a jewel of a woman, but you've turned out only a bit of matrimonial paste." "Then, my love," was the reply, "console yourself with the idea that that paste is very adhesive, and in this case will stick to you as long as you live." "See here," said a fault finding husband, "we must have things arranged in this house so that we shall know where everything is kept." "What, all my heart," sweetly answered his wife, "and let us begin with your into boots, my love. I should dearly love to know where they are kept." In let things run on as usual. It is not often however that one comes across such a crushing retort as that which a shrinking husband received from his wife the other day, through the medium of the public press. He advertised in one of the local journals that he (Thomas A.) would no longer be answerable for the debts incurred by his wife, who seems to have been a truly amiable creature, if one may judge from the advertisement which she published next day in reply: "This is to notify that I, Elizabeth A., am able to pay all my own debts now that I have got shut of Tommy."

The End of a Duelist

The Saturday Review

The Comte de Lanthiere, one of the well born among the bretteurs, met one day in the street a business man named Costern walking with his young and pretty wife. He advanced to him and said with a polite bow, I beg your pardon but I have made a bet with my friend here whom I beg to introduce to you, that I would kiss your wife while she was walking with you!—then the other turned livid—after having given you a slap in the face. Costern fought him next day with pistols. The count's first shot hit Costern on the right ear, his second on the left. Before the third he said "Cette fois je ferai mouche" and with the third he shot Costern through the eye. Costern was avenged in a manner dramatic enough. One night, as Lanthiere sat in his favorite cafe, while masked ball was going on hard by, a strange man in domino and mask came up to him, overturned his glass of punch and offered a glass of cognac in stead. Lanthiere for the first time in his life turned pale and cried "You scoundrel, you don't know who I am." "Oh yes" the stranger replied. "I know who you are quite well" and with the words forced him down into the chair from which he had risen. The urgent waiter brought out the stranger holding a pistol to Lanthiere's head, said "Take your choice, I will blow out your brains on the spot or you will drink off this glass of poison in my hand, or you will fight me with pistols to morrow." With the sabre cool Lanthiere who had fired twenty times with the pistol, replied "How you like, I am as Lanthiere drinks the poison, I did not have humbugged you about the pistol balling you. Lanthiere." The mortified man, the adversaries became fast friends. Lanthiere found that he had drunk a harmless opiate. The stranger left his card "Monsieur Lanthiere, I will meet you with pistols until last Lanthiere cries enough." "What are your pistols?" "Now" said the stranger for the first time, his sabre like a dueling sword and unsprung straight through Lanthiere's heart. Masses were said in the churches of Bordeaux for this man who kept his name secret and who had saved the honor of his country.

THE MODEL NEWSPAPER.

The Inter Ocean for 1888.

Leaving all the news without hesitation or prejudice, consistently to be contagious and comprehensive in the advocacy of well established principles, without being narrow-minded or partial, to cater to the tastes of all classes of intelligent readers, without pandering to the prejudices of any, to present in most attractive form the greatest variety of matter, without curtailing or lowering the standard of any department, to grow in interest and excellence with each succeeding year of its existence is to be the model newspaper.

From the first issue of the present publishers of the Inter Ocean have striven to have this paper reach this high standard, and in each of the ten years of its existence a notable step forward has been taken. As every change has met with encouraging response from the public in the shape of increased patronage it is fair to assume that the efforts of the publishers have been in the right direction, and have been appreciated.

The INTER OCEAN will remain uncompromisingly republican, will maintain its present attitude of protection to American industries, will continue to devote special attention to trade, transportation and economic questions, will form the departments of The Curiosity Shop (a current entertaining topic of curious, interesting and valuable information collected only by inquiries of subscribers), The Woman's Kingdom (devoted to the progressive movements in which women are interested), The Farm and Home (covering topics of special interest to farmers their wives and their children), The Veterinary (containing answers to questions as to the treatment of horses, cattle and other domestic animals by one of the best veterinary surgeons in the west), and Competitions (of a kind in puzzles, enigmas, conundrums, etc.) all of which are peculiar to the paper, will give as much space as hitherto to social and short stories, original and selected sketches and poems, and with increased facilities for news gathering in the shape of special wires to New York and Washington and experienced correspondents well placed at home and abroad will more than maintain its high standard for enterprise and accuracy in all departments of news.

The INTER OCEAN always closely identified with the interests of the west has led in the work of development of both the northwest and the southwest, and it will continue to make prominent the characteristic features of the progress of the newer communities toward statehood. No paper in the country has given so much attention to immigration movements, railway and canal enterprises, race and economic problems, and other topics relating to the prosperity of the older states and the development of the newer sections as the INTER OCEAN.

In short it is constantly enlarging the field of newspaper discussion and grappling unhesitatingly with all new questions that come before the people. It has increased rapidly in circulation among all classes of tradesmen and farmers. Because of its enterprise in foreign special telegraph wires to the great news centers, it has grown in favor with all who like completeness and accuracy in dispatches. Because of its steadfast republicanism and of its close sympathy with the best elements of the republican party, it has grown steadily in favor with party men. Because of the high character and wide range of its literary and special departments it has become a greater favorite in the home than any other distinctively political paper in the country.

The aim has been to make it the best paper for the city reader, the best paper for the business man and his family, the best paper for the student, part and as well as the general reader, and as the circulation of the several editions has increased more rapidly the past year than in any previous year and as it is now larger than that of any paper west of New York City, the publishers feeling that they have fair warrant of popular approval will continue in the course marked out, making such improvements as will keep THE INTER OCEAN at the head of the list of American journals as the model newspaper.

The circulation is best shown by the amount of postage paid on the papers sent to actual subscribers. Judged by this standard, THE INTER OCEAN is far ahead of all of its Chicago contemporaries as is shown by the table below. This table gives the amount of postage paid on circulation by each newspaper named (all of Chicago for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1887.)

THE INTER OCEAN	$13,669 30
The News	189 34
The Times	6,501 30
The Tribune	5,614 51
The Herald	1,143 68

This statement needs no comment. It speaks for itself.

The subscription price of THE INTER OCEAN is as follows:

Weekly edition postage paid is $1 per year
Semi-weekly edition, postage paid ... 50 per year
Daily edition postage paid ... 10.00 per year

Sample copies of THE INTER OCEAN will be sent on application.

Send money in registered letter, money order, bank draft, or by express, at our risk, and be sure and write the name and address of each subscriber plainly. Address

The New Colorado

The main wilderness note in five years it will be the richest and best part of Colorado to live in, and this is not exaggeration.—Prof. S. Richards.

The two prominent and prospective large cities of the New Colorado, alias the late Ute Reservation, are

DELTA AND GRAND JUNCTION.

These towns have and can have in the future, owing to the topography of the country, no rivals. The two towns are not antagonistic to any extent being 51 miles apart with little if any agricultural land between, and each having its own tributary region. The first reached in going westward over the D. & R. G. Railway company's trunk line to Utah is

DELTA.

This is at the junction of the Uncompahgre and Gunnison rivers and commands the great valleys of each. It is 87 miles west of Gunnison city and near the geographical center of Gunnison county which comprises a territory nearly twice as large as the state of Massachusetts. It has the best prospects of any town on the late reservation of being made the county seat of a new county which will probably be formed at the coming session of the next legislature. Four railways pass through or center at the town, and this creates an almost inevitable necessity for shops and the end of divisions of some of these lines. It is the only town on the late reservation where a school was maintained during the summer. A square is set apart for school house, another for court house and four lots for each religious denomination. Water flows and trees are set out on each side of Main street.

Grand Junction,

The prospective Pueblo of the Pacific slope, though unlike Pueblo in having a more equable climate and an abundance of pure water, is situated at the junction of the Gunnison with the Grand, the two largest rivers in the state. It commands the trade of the largest valley of cultivable land at the lowest altitude which is to be found in Colorado. It is the midland country between Pueblo and Salt Lake City, and between the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific, a country 350 miles in extent from east to west and still larger from north to south. The town is equidistant between Salt Lake and Pueblo about 340 miles each way. The town is laid off on a liberal scale. Two hundred and fifty lots have been donated to the public, besides a number of squares for parks and central high school. A number of wells and two large ditches furnish water for the town. The present prices of lots on my list will be raised, perhaps doubled, in three or four days.

In both towns parties intending to invest should do so at once and thus secure the advantage of increase in price. The most desirable lots are nearly all gone.

Call at office of George Macklin over Ainsworth Brown's Notion store during office hours or in morning and evening at office D. & R. G. railway.

Lots for sale also in Montrose, Alamosa, Crested Butte, Colorado Springs and Denver.
